Short Bio.

Liz Firth is a music educator with over thirty-five years of experience tutoring students in clarinet and saxophone. Liz has a proven track record of inspiring and developing young musicians from the early stages of musical development. She has taught in numerous prestigious private schools and colleges in Adelaide, Sydney, Newcastle and the Hunter Valley.

A graduate of the Newcastle Conservatorium (DSCM) and Elder Conservatorium, Adelaide University (BMus Hons), Liz was accepted for Masters study in performance at the Royal College of Music in London and for several years served as a casual clarinet player with the Adelaide Symphony Orchestra.

Always passionate about music education, Liz enjoys working with her students as they meet the challenges of learning a musical instrument and likes to develop an attitude of “can do” in her students as they discover their musical potential. Many of Liz’s students have gone on to become musically aware and accomplished young musicians.

Having worked in many areas of the Australian music industry, including teaching, performing, promotions, retail buying, wholesale, marketing and manufacturing, Liz now dedicates her time to tutoring young clarinet and saxophone students at her private studio. Liz is also a partner in andyfirthmusic.com, where she helps to develop and market Andy’s extensive range of educationally oriented sheet music for clarinet, saxophone and flute students.
